PINELLAS COUNTY IN 2017

ABOUT THE STUDY

CASA: Community Action Stops Abuse, is a certified domestic violence center located in Pinellas County, Florida. CASA requested the Center for Data Analytics and Visualization at the University of South Florida, St. Petersburg to evaluate the economic costs associated with domestic violence in the county.

Many of the costs associated with domestic violence are difficult to quantify because the data are unavailable or the costs themselves are intangible; however, while conservative in its estimates, this study provides a starting point to value the magnitude of such impacts and a rough estimate of the value of the preventive work that CASA and its partners undertake to stop domestic abuse.

“Data suggest a severe underreporting of domestic violence, since there is quite a discrepancy between the number of victims indicated by surveys and those reported to authorities.”

Study Participants

University of South Florida, St. Petersburg led the study of the Economic Impact of Domestic Violence in Pinellas County: Dr. Han Reichgelt, Professor of Information Systems Management and Director of the Institute for Data Analytics and Visualization and Dr. Rebecca Harris, Economics Instructor worked in partnership with the Women and Leadership Initiative at USF St. Petersburg. They worked closely with staff from CASA: Lariana Forsythe, CEO; Dr. Jill Flansburg, Senior Grants and Compliance Manager; and Gabriela Lopez, Community Education and Awareness Manager; and Sherry Clester, Victim Advocate for the St. Petersburg Police Department and CASA board member.
